THE LIFE OF WASHINGTON. By WASHINGTON LAVING. New York: G. P. Potnum. Chicago: S. C.

The enterprising publisher has determined to complete the splendid uniform edition of Irbest of his writings. By thus associating the greatest effort of his life with the history of the Pather of his Country, if is plain that he meant to reat his fams mainly upon it. From the time when his Scotch nurse took him, when achild, into the presence of Washington and oblained his blessing upon the bairs that bose its name, the desire, of ourse for many years misty and undefined, but ripening as years railed as hits the solemn teachings of destiny, seems to have possessed the great satisfact to give to prescrib, his own version of the lessons of patriotism, of self-accretic, of rigid and religious self-coursel, of all the nobler attributes that adors the character of man, tanght by the life and wayspresses.

We take the following from the money article of the New York Herold. The writer has a clear and correct understanding of the motives which solutes the St. Logic Chamber has a clear and correct understanding of the motives which somes the St. Louis Chas her of Commerce in its warfare upon the bridge. He conclusions correspond with those of every intelligent and honorable citizen, sact the judiciary of the nation must, in accordance with all just commercial and legal principles, put an extinguisher upon the imane efforted St. Louis to destroy the bridge. As to Mr. Biasell, we forbear all remarks till the evidence on his trial shall show hew far he has violated the laws in carrying out the purposes of his amployers:

An example of the extent to which commercial rivally is pushed in the West, is afforded by the recemt police returns of Chicago. A man named Biasell was instey arrested and held to bail for an alleged attempt to burn down the Rock Island bridge. It is sitted that he was in the employ of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Louis, who wanted the bridge destroyed. For years the Rock Island bridge has been the great implear of the total of lown as carried into Elisios, and themes to Chicago. Mr. Samuel Hairston, a wealthy farmer in Haiffax, has an overseer on one of his plantations who is active disciplinarian, and a man for as insurrection, invited him to ge with them and witness the plan of operations. Not anapecting that they had any design upon him, but being anxious to capture the ringleeders of the rebest, if he should see them, he stepped into another room, armed himself with a five shooter, and then started off with the assasins, they not knowing that he was fully prepared for any emergency.

know how to manage a large farm, it would perhaps be useless for us to offer any extended advice. The laty, lottering, loading, istiass, pine-box whitting heir to a hundred and sixty acres will tell you in a drawling lone that farming is a poor business for a poor man, such as he; but that if he had eight hundred or a thousand acres, he would leach slow people how to make money. But we are met werry day by men of amail means, who would like to live in the country, and who could purchase small farms. They ask us whether or not a man can make a comfortable living on a little farm?—and we always say, ye. Now what is a small farm? Is the more thickly cottled portions of Now England and the Middle States, it means twenty five to ferty serves. Here in the West, where men have more enlarged views, it means from a hundred to a hundred and sixty. But our farms, being more fertile and more easily worked than theirs, must oventually become amailer. We shall therefore put down the present standard to between forty and sixty acres. In the first place, do not choose your small farm at an inconvenieuts distance from a rail-road or a good market town. In the accord road or a good market town. In the second place, in farming on a small scale there are certain crops which here so many advantages own others, that you should by all means select land well calculated for such crops. The most important crop of this kind is corn. No other crop, in the amount of grain and fodder, and in the variety of uses to which it can be applied, compares with sorn. Perhaps next to corn is clover. Let those two be made the principal realisance. They yield a large amount of produce per acre; they can be easily increased by manuring, which may be done cheaply. They are less severe on land than any other similar crop of equal value; and, when fed property, will yield a vast quantity of manure. Subadiary to this, good corn land will produce almost any crop which it is desirable to cultivate.

In order to carry out this course of farming, it will be necessary to sow some kind of grain after corn to seed down with. This may be after cor to seed down with. This may be apring wheat, beriey, or cats. The latter is somewhat uncertain to seed clover with. Barley and spring wheat are, for this reason, best. But as the comparative value of these crops waries greatly in different sections, it would be wall for each warner to see the control of the sections. varies greatly is different sections, it would be well for such man to settle the point for him-self; always keeping in mind that his seres must be well seeded to clever. Rasising roots, such as turnips, beets, carrots, parenips, can be made very profitable on a small scale. They can be made to produce from 800 to 1,200 bushels per acrs, and are sx-collent for ozen, cows, and begs. Cut up, and a little meal and salt sprinkled on them, they are unequalled for sattle; for hogs they should be stammed.

Sometimes the iron pen was so hard, that the horses were set fast, and it because merissary is use the pickars to release them before they found proceed. After the first year, the land produces double the former crops, many of the earrests being sixteen inches in length and of proportionate thickness. This amendment could have prisen solely from the deep plowing. Manures I had soarcely any, the land not producing clover sufficient to keep any stock worth seastlenning, and it was not possible to procure sufficient (a least of the source) and the first year after the deep plowing, which it had retained, notwithstanding the plowing with the comman plows for thirty five years. After this subsoil plowing the crop of wheat was atrong and long in the strew, such the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain strong and long in the strew, and the grain of the produced headers, weighing full saxy-four pounds to the bushe. The quantity as might be expected, not large (about twenty-six bushells to the sure), but great in comparison to what it produced hefore. The millers were desirons of purchasting is, and could searcely believe it was grown upon the heath land, as in Rain water cannot come in contact with the soil, to even with a gravel heap without dissolving some of it. Expose almost any stone, or handful of gravel, washed clean, to the action of a quart or so of rain water for several days, and upon evaporating the water, it will be seen from the residue jets that a pertion has been dissolved. Now let these same stones be exposed covered or natile covered with water. dissolved. Now let these same atones be exposed, covered or partly covered with water, in a sancer, so the action of frost, acting them out of doors for two or three cold nights, taking eare that they thaw by day. Pouring off the water, rinning with fresh, and evaporate as above, andight will be seen that a much larger quantity has come into solution. The reason is, that all stones being somewhat porous, by the action of the frest their outer porsion is broken up, scaled and fissured, and a vasity greater surface is argued to the action of the water, even shough this fissuring is not viable to the eye. When land is exposed to alternate freezing and thawing, the same effect must take place.

Perhaps a majority of the County Agricultural Soliciae of Lilnois own, or at least have selected, their fair grounds. Their annual exhibitions have become fixed and permanent, and it now only remains to make them do the greatest possible amount of good. And just here arises a troublesume question. There must be offered five or eight handred premiums to make a first rate fair, and bring out the best products of a whole county. Ten or fifteen hundred dollars is as much as any common fair will nest, after deducting all the incidental outlays, except premiums. This allows not more than two collars to each premium. Very few fairs will jield so large a return. It is well known that a large portion of the premiums are never paid at all, and even the fortunate receiptate unadally wait a long time after the awards are made. Unless there be an attractive show that exhibitors are attracted by the intrinsic or coad value of the premiums? In it not the fact of having taken a premium which makes a wan the raising of small fruits. There are few places in which they cannot be sold prediably. It is a good plan to commence their culture on a small scale, and increase the amount grown as throumstances may require. It is also well to have a good variety of fruits—there may be an occasional failure of one art we kinds.

There are portions of the West where we should advise an industrious young man to commence life with twenty sores of tillable land.
